IMPORTANT NOTICE

ALUMINUM AND PRESSURE-TREATED LUMBER

▼ GALVANIC SCALE

CATHODE

Since the beginning of 2004, new pressure-treated lumber with ACQ replaces the old arsenic-laced pressure-treated lumber which was abandoned voluntarily by the Canadian manufacturers following agreements concluded with different government and environment organizations. Some manufacturers now offer the same quality and same longevity as the old treated lumber. The disadvantage of this new treated lumber relates to the corrosion of materials in direct contact.

When two metals are in direct contact in a moist environment, the less noble one (anode) will corrode. The second one (cathode) remains partly protected from corrosion. This phenomenon is called galvanic corrosion or galvanic cell effect. The further apart two metals on the galvanic scale, the higher the speed and importance of corrosion will be.

Since copper and aluminum are very distant on the galvanic scale, galvanic corrosion is at high risk. Indeed, the presence of copper in great quantity accelerates the corrosion of aluminum. Therefore, you should not install aluminum materials on ACQ pressure-treated lumber to avoid damage due to premature corrosion.

The degree of corrosion is dependant of many various factors. Some of the more relevant are, among others, salt, water, moisture content of wood, atmosphere and the presence of other melts such as steel or mechanically galvanized screws.

PRODUCT INSPECTION BEFORE INSTALLATION

Any defect related to the appearance of siding products, mouldings and accessories must be communicated to Duchesne et Fils Ltée before the installation of the product.

Duchesne et Fils Ltée reserves the right to refuse any request for reimbursement of expenses related to the installation of the product (labor, equipment, etc.) for any defect that could have been detected before the installation.
